

SEMPLER'S WEAK IMITATOR.

D. A. WILLIAMS BENEVOLED WITH MR. WICKOFF'S FATE.

Albert Greentack, a former employee, threatened to cut his head off unless D. A. Williams would give him $100. He could draw the knife he carried. A dangerous crank, whose methods were similar to those of G. H. Semple, the man who killed President Weykoff of the Bank of New Amsterdam, was arrested yesterday and sent to Bellevue Hospital to be examined as to his sanity.

He is a tall, thin, middle-aged man, a Hollander, 31 years of age. He has no home. A late stonemason by trade, and up to about eighteen months ago, he was employed in the stone works of B. A. & G. N. Williams, at the foot of East Sixty-eighth street. He drank a good deal and his habits were irregular. If he worked steadily for two weeks, he invariably went on a drunk the week following. He was drunk he loitered around the yard and annoyed the men. He showed signs of a weakened intellect, and he was finally discharged on account of his unreliability.

Greentack has been hanging around the place ever since. He has constantly made a nuisance of himself by interfering with the stonemasons and picking quarrels with them. He demanded money of the workmen, and threatened dire consequences if they refused. He is a big, powerful fellow, and many of them were afraid of him and gave him small sums to keep him from coming to the place.

He slept on the rocks and the street along the East River near the yards. On pay day he was always around, begging the men as they were paid off, and following them up to their homes, but he never got any money. He was always followed by Williams after he had paid off the men, and on one occasion, followed him all the way home, where he was told to give him any money he wanted. He refused to give him any more as far as Third avenue, saying that he would follow him and would have it, if he had to kill somebody.

Six or seven months ago Foreman Masder, who felt sorry for Greentack, took him to his home again in the yards, and he was put to work at the end of two weeks he had to be discharged. He was then taken to the hospital, saying that either he or Masder must be between noon and 1 o'clock. The letter was in Dutch and contained many threats and threats. When noon came Greentack could not find Masder, so he decided to hang himself.

There is a big travelling crane in the yard used to carry stones from place to place. It runs on a sort of railway, and from this Greentack suspended himself by fastening an iron chain around his neck. He was seen by Reeth, who saw him hang himself, run up and took him down. Greentack went away crying and screaming, and he was taken to the hospital. He was there for some time, but he was not cured. He was then taken to the hospital again, and he was there for some time, but he was not cured.

He was then taken to the hospital again, and he was there for some time, but he was not cured. He was then taken to the hospital again, and he was there for some time, but he was not cured.

WAS THE WELL POISONED?

A Staten Island Village Shows Follows a Mysterious Death.

The residents of the village of Bloomfield, Staten Island, allege that enough poison was found in the well on the premises of George Merrill to have killed a score of men, and as it was the practice of a number of the neighbors to make a short cut across Merrill's farm and stop at his well for a drink, they regard their escape from death by poisoning as miraculous.

No one will say who poisoned the well, but all are willing to tell in detail of a neighborhood row which has been in progress for over a year. The row is over that very short cut through Merrill's yard and through the farm of Joseph Wandell, his next door neighbor.

This short cut has been used by pedestrians and teams for years until Wandell came to the village. He dug deep trenches across it and put up signs which read: "No Trespassing." This trouble began a year ago, and Robert Ivey, who owns the place which Merrill now occupies, purchased a strip of property at the corner of Wandell's place for a new outlet. Ivey and Wandell had several encounters over the roadway, but after Merrill took the place the fight was not renewed until recently, when Merrill, in a dispute with Wandell, refused to pay for an arrest for refusing to pay his road tax or to work out the tax.

A new short cut road had been made close along Wandell's rear line during the winter, and Wandell arrested a man, George Avere, found dug in the road. Avere was filled up, and as a retaliation Wandell's passage through from the farm to the village was closed by large posts and signs forbidding trespass.

Wandell, according to the stories of Merrill, hired a man named John Smith to dig a tunnel under Merrill's place. Smith came home with the tunnel, and Merrill was discovered in the well by the superintendent of the village, Mr. J. M. B. ELMER. Merrill's place for magnolia. He went to the well for a drink and found some small crystals of a white substance. He took them to a chemist, and a quantity of the crystals were found in it. He declared it to be a form of muriatic acid.

Wandell, however, declared that he had no charge to make regarding the use of poison. He said that he had no idea of the poison, and that he had no idea of the poison. He said that he had no idea of the poison, and that he had no idea of the poison.

When Merrill was seen at his home by a reporter yesterday, he was very nervous. He said that he had no idea of the poison, and that he had no idea of the poison. He said that he had no idea of the poison, and that he had no idea of the poison.
